

Nicole Tersigni is All In.

In a pro bono case, Nicole Tersigni (under the supervision of Jordan Bolton and Stuart Schwartz) successfully prosecuted our clients' primary breach of contract claim, and successfully defended our clients' fraud claims through summary disposition proceedings. In short, our clients hired the defendant contractors to remodel our clients' modest 900 square foot home, so the main level would be accessible to their severely disabled son. The defendant contractors took our clients' money, completed a portion of the work, then walked off the job, claiming fraud in the inducement. After taking a significant supporting role in discovery, and a lead role in getting the defendant contractors' counterclaims dismissed as a sanction for their discovery abuses, Nicole took a lead role in the briefing related to competing motions for summary. The Court dispensed with oral argument, granted our clients' motion on their breach of contract action, and denied the defendant contractors' request to dismiss our clients' fraud claims. Great work, Nicole!
